Carl Jacobson will present "The 'Oberlin Band' in Shanxi, 1881-1900" on Friday, April 19 at 2 p.m. in 060 Jennings Hall. The presentation introduces the background and development of the "Oberlin Band," a group of missionaries with Oberlin connections that served and died in China. Beginning in 1881, the group came under auspices of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and journeyed to Shanxi Province. It traces their activities in the province including street corner evangelism, medical work, opium refuges, education and work with women. In the summer of 1900 all were killed in the course of the Boxer Uprising. <http://oia.osu.edu/news/2985>

Lomnie Thompson (School of Earth Sciences OSU)
Bryan Mark (Department of Geography OSU)
Featuring the documentary Glacial Balance by Ethan Steinman

Thompson and Mark are studying the evidence of climate change in Peru, and they are eager to share what they've uncovered and hear about what the community wants to know regarding the state of glacier change in Peru. The research team is investigating the physical and human dimensions of environmental change in glacierized landscapes. While in Peru, they are studying glacier changes and impacts over different scales of space and time using many methods. For example, their fieldwork has involved measuring water quantity and quality in glacier-fed streams while simultaneously using aircraft to measure the extent and position of the glaciers in the Cordillera Blanca. The interdisciplinary team has also conducted extensive interviews with Peruvian residents about their concerns, stories,

The Education Abroad Discussion Series established by International Affairs and the Office of Undergraduate Education continues to foster dialogue among faculty about study abroad at Ohio State. April's discussion will focus on undergraduate research in international settings, and will take place on Thursday (4/18) at noon in 156 University Hall. The conversation will address the broad range of opportunities for undergraduate research abroad and the resources available on campus to help students get started.
